The CASTLE Treatment:

Working with a highly trained and skilled staff, teenagers have a rigorous daily schedule, including creating and meeting daily goals, having classroom time with specialized teachers, and attending groups like “Motivation to Change,” “Stinkin’ Thinkin,’” “Triggers,” “Relapse Prevention,” and “Art & Music Therapy.”

Evening “commitments” by other young people encouraging them in their own treatment in recovery help to inspire our patients. Friday and Saturday nights parents are invited to attend a movie group. These and other therapies serve as springboards for discussion about relationships between parents and their children.

A spiritual component consistent with traditional substance abuse care is merged with state-of-the-art knowledge about adolescent brain development into an innovative approach to substance abuse treatment.

The teenage brain is especially vulnerable to addictions...

Addiction can happen any time but never in a vacuum.

With an appreciation of an individual’s home environment, social environment, self-concept, and biology, we help teens and their families to understand how addictions start and what fuels them.

They also learn what needs to change and how to replace drugs and alcohol with productive and constructive outlets.

The CASTLE is a program of High Point Treatment Center, well-known for its quality care of adults struggling with addictions. That same quality is applied to adolescents, as we recognize that this population is at high-risk for lifelong addictions if not provided with early intervention and treatment.
